THE FOOD PROBLEM

All persons interested in keeping healthy, and particularly the parents of growing children, should be thoroughly informed as to the value of milk as a food.

It would seem that the constant advice of doctors, health officers and similar authorities should have resulted in adequate milk consumption. But use of it, on the average, is still below the desirable point. A quart of milk will supply 675 calories—about a third of the day's need of a child of ten, and about a quarter of the day's need of a grown person. It contains, in generous amounts, the three vitamins A, G and D, which are absolutely essential to bodily well-being. It likewise contains three of the important minerals needed by the body—calcium, phosphorus and iron. And it contains proteins whose chief work is to build tissue in the body.

It is an historical fact that the pastoral people of other times, milk drinkers are commonly in better condition than those who avoid it. Milk has been called the most nearly perfect food—a statement that medical research has justified.

NORWAY

- A Good Place To Trade

Uncle Zeke and Hulda

Visit the Stores

Picking corn for the canning shop was suspended Tuesday afternoon because Hulda insisted we go the rounds and pick up a few things for the grandson's school. But this week and County Fair next. Wife is still picking, putting up shell beans, fussing because the boarders leave us next week, and busy on the telephone informing the rural neighbors that our budding grandson has joined Principal Sampson's brood at the high school in the village. If we don't have "nuts in the belfry" before settling down for winter, it will be a saving act of Providence.

After hitching the nag behind Jackson's store, Hulda and one of the female boarders launched out with their obedient servant tagging along. Right into Ashton's we went for another purchase of wall paper. The sale has been extended to next Monday night, so the prudent wife after considerable fussing, selected a few nifty patterns at a big discount. The plan is simple, get a double roll and pay one cent more than the price of a single one. That's easy, and the goods are moving for prices of wall covering will climb. Probably the ceiling won't be the limit.

At Merchant's Store Hulda and her summer friend spent some time looking over the new fall skirts, blouses, sweaters and garments, made with the latest in fabric and style cuts. Silk dresses will be in demand the coming winter, along with light weight wool and crepes. Prices have not advanced here. A nice lot of percales are marked at 19c a yard, sold in our store for 25c. Replacements later are sure to be much higher.

Great was our surprise at the L. F. Pike Co. to run into an old up-country friend right on the spot for a county fair. Following a custom learned in the gay 90's, he comes early to do his trading, then visits the cattle show. Reading about city advances, he was tickled to death to find suits, overcoats and furnishings on the same old mark at this time. My country friend bought freely for future use and figured he saved a good bit on this lucky trip by doing it now. Guess the old chap is correct for by now time suits and other garments may jump several dollars beyond the present marks. Others coming to town next week better plan to capture a few sensible garments while the going is good.

NEW WINTER COATS

At An Old Fashioned Price

And we say "old fashioned price" advisably, because not a coat in our new collection can be duplicated at the price it is marked today. Added labor costs, rising commodity prices, shortened working hours, elimination of "sweat shops" manufacturing—all these factors combined are sending prices steadily upward. Never before—and the Merchant Store is not alone in saying this—has it been so distinctly to your advantage to buy now for each day that you put off purchasing makes it all the more certain that when you do buy you will have to spend more money for identical merchandise, buy now.

What is a Local Contest?

At the end of the year, a local contest is held in every town in the county. If there are two or more clubs in the town, the contest is held between the clubs. If there is only one club, the contest is held between the club and the county. The contest is held in the form of a quiz, and the club or clubs which score the highest number of points are the winners.

The purpose of the contest is to give the clubs an opportunity to show their work to the county, and to give the county an opportunity to see the work of the clubs. The contest is also a means of giving the clubs a chance to win prizes for their work.

The contest is held in the form of a quiz, and the club or clubs which score the highest number of points are the winners. The prizes are given to the winners by the county.

My Trip from Florida to Maine

By a Maine Visitor

Left West Palm Beach at 7:35 a. m. There were four of us grown people besides little Mary and with all our baggage and our car a big one, we were very closely packed in. The scenery through Florida is not very changeable, just white sand and scrub palmetto. The sand is so white it looks like patches of snow on the green. Beautiful broad black roads so smooth and level and straight as an arrow. One can look for miles and not see a crook or turn and see it come to a pin point. We followed beside the Indian river for many miles. Passed a high school and we were told was the oldest one in the U. S. We saw lovely pond lilies in bloom right in the ditches beside the road.

Stuart was the first place of any size we passed, pretty houses with well kept lawns with shrubbery and flowers. But it means constant care and plenty of fertilizer and water to have a nice lawn on this sand. Next we came to Fort Pierce, a good sized place and good looking homes and many signs of life. Rooms to let as everybody is trying to get a dollar if possible. We had a short detour here as a bridge was being built and went up quite a hill for Florida. We passed some orange groves but the fruit had been gathered and the roads for some distance were all bordered with oleanders all in bloom, red, pink and white.

Next place was Vero Beach quite a nice place and we were told was good fishing there. Lots of cars passed us and all packed up going north. Noticed a California one and a number of little Austins which seemed to go along as fast as the big ones. The inhabitants from towns and cities seem to be here and they live in small shacks with never a glass window, just wooden shutters and a lot of pickaninies at each one and the old man sitting around smoking a long clay pipe, looking contented and happy and always some black dogs running around. Why they think they must have black dogs is a mystery unless they want things to match.

Our next place was a place called Ocala, a quiet little place. Next was Titusville, another good looking place. Then we passed through Lake Wales, a very handsome place. The streets from here all the way up through Daytona and Ocala had the big oaks on both sides. With the long grass growing hanging from the limbs and beautiful residences, with lovely lawns, are laid out with flowers and shrubbery. We passed through Daytona but did not go to the beach as that is across the Halifax river. Instead, which looks about the same as Daytona, passed through St. Augustine and down the main street, saw the old slave market and drove around by the old Spanish fort, and on to Jacksonville, a big city, and everything seemed very busy, crossed the ferry over the St. Johns river and drove to Kingsland and stayed all night at Hotel Camden, had driven 112 miles.

Got started again next morning at 6 a. m., crossed the St. Mary's river, between Florida and Georgia. We went over many long bridges and all over water. Some over railroads and many long bridges of concrete were built up over swamping land which must have cost a great amount of money and labor. We passed some pine groves, tapped for turpentine. The southern pines do not have any limbs on them until they get up twenty or thirty feet high and then the limbs are used to seeing our white pine, with limbs all the way down, they look like a lot of tall poles stuck down.

We passed a number of convicts' camps. The convicts, some white and some colored, dressed in striped uniforms, were on guard duty. Always two guards standing by with guns. Crossed a long bridge over the Savannah river. The water looks like cocoa, from the color of the soil, which is red, and when wet, as slippery as grass. There are no clear streams of water all up through the Carolinas. Savannah is a very pretty city, many of the streets are laid out with parkways between, and beautiful flowers. We entered South Carolina and the great change which we passed through seemed to be ploved up and planted to corn, tobacco and cotton, and there were more women working in the fields than men. We passed over the Santee River which was more than a mile long, and after going over the main part of the river, the land is so wet the road is built up, some parts twenty-five feet from the ground. Passed through Sumter, a big city.

Soon after passing Sumter we had nice green woods on either side, which was a great relief after passing through so many miles of land all plowed up and planted to crops. Drove to Florence, a big city, and stopped at the Colonial Manor for the night. Had driven 335 miles.

Started next morning at 6 a. m., at 7:30, we entered North Carolina. We passed tobacco houses where they dry and cure the tobacco. We saw many small children, not over ten years old, working in the fields, hoeing or driving a mule, to cultivate. Came through Dillon, Lumberton and Rocky Mount, small places. As we went into the north part, we began to find hills, which was a variation after the long stretch of level country, and now in Virginia, we saw a few apple orchards which looked homelike.

Passed through the city of Petersburg, where many brick mansions and a beautiful park, with big, shady elms and oaks. Came to the bridge over the Appomattox river, a long one with an ell in the center, leading off to another side of the river, something rather unusual, passed through the city of Richmond, a big one with many tall skyscrapers. Went on a few miles farther by an old mill and stopped for the night at a hotel, called the Old Mill Inn.

Got started next morning at 6 a. m. Came through the city of Fredericksburg just outside, there were many men working, widening the street, mostly colored men, almost all the folks we passed coming through Georgia and the Carolinas were colored. Hills now and green woods like Maine.

Went over the Rappahannock river, an immensely long bridge and came to Washington, where we stopped a short time. Went up in the Washington monument and to the White House, and through the rooms which are open to the public, quite a crowd of people looking around. From there to the Smithsonian Institution, where there were many interesting things to see. We thought we would like to spend a month there, but had to take a hurried look around and away again.

Next came through the big city of Baltimore and over the Susquehanna river. There is a large dam over this river, called the Conowingo Dam, near Conowingo, Maryland. It has made a lake over 100 feet deep and 40 miles long. The U. S. highway No. 2 is built on the top of the dam, which is about a mile long. The power house is on one side of the highway and the large cranes for raising the gates are on the other side. There are three traveling cranes to lift the gates which extend about the whole width of the dam. The power which is generated there is used in the large cities near there. Wilmington and Baltimore, principally. It is a very unusual and interesting piece of workmanship.

Next city was Philadelphia, which is about one hundred miles from Baltimore, we came over the Roosevelt Boulevard, it is fourteen miles long, with three driveways and parkways between, a most beautiful drive, so avoided the traffic of the main part of the city. Then we had a number of cities to come through: Trenton, N. J., Newark, Jersey, Hoboken, and to the wonderful Washington Bridge, over the Hudson river. Truly, a most wonderful piece of handiwork of man. Took the Boston River parkway, a three lane road, a lovely drive. Then into the state of Connecticut with many more cities, with the usual amount of traffic which we were thankful to get through without mishap and into Massachusetts, coming by way of Worcester and Lowell, passed through to Portsmouth, N. H., and into good old Maine, with her broad, green fields and lakes and hills, came to the pretty little city of Portland. We were somewhat tired and glad to know we were at the end of our trip.

He sold his soul for a pot of gold. For sure there never's another. Would he so mean, or so it would seem. As to be desired by children around. He did as he liked, without a friend. He man despised by children around. He died unmourned and unwept. And never entered that lonesome pit. At the end of a lonesome day. With never a clasp of a friendly hand Or a voice to bid him stay.
